

Shook Teams Up with Prominent Boston and Philadelphia Trial Lawyers to Expand Northeast Presence

Boston and Philadelphia attorneys bring enhanced capabilities in environmental and toxic tort litigation as well as complex business litigation, class action, product liability and other areas.

PHILADELPHIA (August 8, 2019) Renowned for its well-established client roster in the Northeast, Shook, Hardy & Bacon announces the addition of a new Boston location and expands its current Philadelphia presence. The new team focuses primarily on high-stakes environmental and toxic tort litigation, as well as complex business disputes, class action, product liability and other areas.

Five partners, including Thomas M. Goutman, known nationally for environmental and toxic tort litigation, and Richard L. Campbell, who will lead the Boston office of Shook, join the firm in August. The Northeast addition follows the opening of new Shook offices in Atlanta and Los Angeles, allowing the firm to serve its health, science and technology clients from 15 distinct markets.

“Part of our strategic plan has always been to grow in the Northeast, where many of our clients are headquartered,” stated Shook Chair Madeleine McDonough, who divides her time between Washington, D.C. and Kansas City. “With offices in Philadelphia and D.C., Boston was a natural next step. We searched for the right attorneys to better serve clients and align with our firm culture. We are confident Tom, Rich and the rest of the group will perfectly complement our environmental, toxic tort and complex litigators.”

“We are very excited to be joining a science-driven firm like Shook, capable of finding solutions to some of the country’s most contentious and complex cases,” stated Goutman, who has represented a global chemical manufacturer in complex litigation.

New Attorneys in Boston:

- Managing Partner Richard Campbell will help grow the Boston office and serve clients in high-stakes toxic tort and environmental litigation. He previously has represented clients in heavy equipment, aviation and automotive manufacturing;
- Of Counsel Brandon Arber brings experience in complex business disputes and will focus on environmental and toxic tort litigation matters;
- Of Counsel Melissa Nott Davis serves clients in high-stakes environmental and toxic tort litigation. She has counseled clients in complex business and intellectual property matters spanning a wide variety of industries including life sciences, pharma/biotech, consumer products and technology, among others;
- Of Counsel Stephen Hansen brings experience representing companies in complex environmental mass torts and large-scale consumer and employment class actions across the country;
- Associate Alan Y. Wong is a litigator who will advocate for clients with environmental and toxic tort litigation matters, and other areas.

New Attorneys in Philadelphia

- Partner Thomas Goutman defends corporations in environmental and toxic tort litigation, class action and product liability matters. Goutman is recognized as a leading authority in his areas of law and is on the forefront of making new laws and testing innovative theories in court for his clients;
- Partner David Haase focuses on toxic tort and environmental litigation, in addition to the automotive industry and high-exposure product liability claims across many industries;
